1. SITUATION

Who are we? What has happened?

While most expected the July elections in Guinea to finally bring peace to the torn country, unfortunately they brought the opposite.

Just 2 days after the election of President Tanielu Akumu of the Social Democratic Party of Guinea (SDPG), the radical opposition and its militia, the National Front of Guinea (NFG), have claimed that the election was scam and declared it to be invalid.

Consequently, a civil war has erupted between the Guinean Armed Forces (GAF) and the opposition's militia, and NFG forces have attacked a military outpost and managed to secure military-grade weaponry and vehicles. Furthermore, several GAF units have deserted and joined the NFG, putting the remaining loyalist forces, lead by General Sefa Deli, under even more pressure.

In the last 2 months, the NFG managed to take control of most of the country, forcing President Tanielu Akumu to seek shelter in the Town of Chongo, in the South West of the country. The majority of the GAF Forces have been pushed back to the North West, rendering them unable to support friendly forces who are already in contact with NFG troops.

As a last resort act, President Tanielu Akumu has requested for aid from France, the former colonial rulers of Guinea.

One week ago, the French Prime Minister and the Parliament authorised Operation Fusilier, the deployment of a Carrier Group to the West African Coast.

We are part of the 8th Marine Infantry Parachute Regiment, Last Resort Company, tasked with securing President Tanielu Akumu and bringing stability to the war-torn country of Guinea.
