1. SITUATION

Who are we? What has happened?

NATO's Standing NATO Maritime Group (SNMG) continued its Baltic Sea deployment and training is visited Violahti, Finland.

During this year's visit of the German Bundeswehr, training in the cold weather and dense forest coastline of Finland is key for NATO wide defense operations.

As tensions between the Russian Federation and NATO is back at Cold war levels, being present and showing force around the EU borders is increased.

Finland has warned NATO that Russia has "almost completed" its build-up of forces that could be used for an offensive against the country, compounding fears that Moscow could launch an invasion at any time.

According to the Finnish Defense Ministry's latest intelligence assessment, Russia has now deployed more than 1,000 troops in the region.

The full strength of RFAF (Russian Federation's Armed Forces) land and naval group at the Finnish direction is over 3,000 personnel.

Many inhabitants of this area are native Russian speakers, they believe that this part of Finland should join the Russian Federation and might be willing to fight.

Reports have indicated that Russian trained operatives are trying to rile up a coop. Promising the RFAF will assist those who join them
